

Chhattisgarh cops start school in Narayanpur for surrendered Naxals

Police in Chhattisgarh's Narayanpur district have started a school for surrendered Naxals who are now part of the force, an official said Sunday. Narayanpur Superintendent of Police Mohit Garg said the school, with three teachers and over 300 surrendered ultras, had started functioning about a month ago in the Police Line area in Narayanpur town.

"Most surrendered cadre could not study because their schools were destroyed by Maoists. Some were forced to drop out of school to join the Naxals. After joining the police force.
